MOTION FOR CERTIFICATION OF THIS COURT’S ORDER DATED
MARCH 30, 2020 (ECF No. 31)
PURSUANT TO 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b)

Defendant United States of America moves this Court to certify its Order dated March 30, 2020 (ECF No. 31), for interlocutory appeal. The grounds for this motion are set forth in the below memorandum in support.<sup>1</sup>

consent to the relief sought herein.

INTRODUCTION

2 Because of this Court’s thorough familiarity with the factual allegations and the

3 relevant statutory background, that information is not recounted fully herein.<sup>2</sup> Briefly,

5 Plaintiffs – five adult female aliens suing on behalf of themselves and their respective

6 alien children – illegally crossed the border between ports of entry into the United States

7 in Arizona with their children in May 2018. They did so at a time when the Department

8 of Homeland Security (“DHS”) had been directed by the President of the United States to 9 exercise its federal statutory authority to detain aliens during the pendency of their

10 immigration proceedings, and after the Attorney General had directed federal prosecutors

11 to adopt a “zero-tolerance” policy for immigration offenses referred for prosecution

12 under 8 U.S.C. § 1325(a) as well as other criminal immigration statutes. Plaintiffs were

13 amenable to prosecution under 8 U.S.C. § 1325(a) and were detained pending decisions

14 regarding criminal prosecutions. Plaintiffs subsequently were detained by U.S.

15 Immigration and Customs Enforcement (“ICE”) in secure adult detention facilities

16 pending decisions regarding criminal prosecution and pending removal proceedings. As

17 a result, Plaintiffs’ minor children were determined to be “unaccompanied alien children”

18 (“UACs”) pursuant to 6 U.S.C. § 279(g)(2), and were placed in the care and custody of 19 the Office of Refugee Resettlement (“ORR”), a component of the U.S. Department of

20 Health and Human Services (“HHS”) pursuant to the Trafficking Victims Protection

27 <sup>2</sup> The United States’ motion to dismiss fully sets forth the background and legal 28 framework. ECF No. 18 (“MTD”) at 2-9.

1 Reauthorization Act of 2008 (“TVPRA”), 8 U.S.C. § 1232(b)(3). After being separated
2 for approximately two months, the mothers and children were reunified and released.

3 Plaintiffs brought this action under the Federal Tort Claims Act (“FTCA”)
4 asserting state-law claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress (“IIED”) and 5 negligence arising out of the separation of each mother from her child. ECF No. 1
6 (“Compl.”). The United States filed a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P.
7 12(b)(1), asserting a lack of subject matter jurisdiction because Plaintiffs’ claims are 8 barred by the FTCA’s due care and discretionary function exceptions, 28 U.S.C.
9 § 2680(a), and Plaintiffs failed to allege claims for which a private person could be held 10 liable under applicable state law. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1346(b)(1), 2674. ECF No. 18. Plaintiffs
11 filed an opposition to the motion to dismiss, ECF No. 19 (“Opp.”), and the United States 12 filed a reply. ECF No. 25 (“Reply”). On March 30, 2020, the district court denied the 13 United States’ motion to dismiss. ECF No. 31 (“Order”).

14 The court held that the due care exception was inapplicable because “[t]he United 15 States cites no statute or regulation mandating the separation of Plaintiffs upon their entry 16 into the country,” and “[i]t cites no statute or regulation requiring the detention of 17 individuals who are ‘amenable to prosecution’ in facilities different from those who are 18 not ‘amenable to prosecution.’” Order at 5-6. Moreover, the court determined that 19 “family separation was established by executive policy – not by a statute or regulation –
20 which is not covered by the due care exception.” Order at 5-6. Finally, the court stated 21 that “the United States fails to explain how a parent who is merely ‘amenable’ to 22
23
24
25
26
27
28

1 prosecution – but has not been charged with a crime – is, for that reason, unavailable to 2 care for her child.” Id. at 6 n.4.

3 The court also found that the discretionary function exception was inapplicable
4 because Plaintiffs plausibly alleged the family separations violated their substantive due 5 process rights under the Constitution. Order at 7 (citing Ms. L. v. U.S. Immigration and 6 Customs Enf’t, 310 F. Supp. 3d 1133, 1144–46 (S.D. Cal. 2018)). Regarding the 7 government’s failure to keep Plaintiffs apprised of the whereabouts of their children, its 8 failure to facilitate more communications between parent and child, and the government’s 9 tracking capabilities, the district court declined to separately address whether claims
10 based upon these allegations are barred by the exception. Id. at 7.<sup>3</sup>

11 The United States respectfully submits that the court’s Order should be certified 12 for interlocutory appeal because it involves “controlling question[s] of law as to which 13 there is substantial ground for difference of opinion,” and resolving these questions on an 14 immediate appeal “may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.” 28
15 U.S.C. § 1292(b). While the court of appeals “may address any issue fairly included 16 within the certified order because it is the order that is appealable, and not the controlling 17 question identified by the district court[,]” Rivera v. NIBCO, Inc., 364 F.3d 1057, 1063

24
25 <sup>3</sup> The district court also held that “Plaintiffs have demonstrated a private analogue 26 in like circumstances.” Order at 4. The court did not address the United States’
27 argument that Plaintiffs have not stated an actionable claim under Arizona law because 28 their harms were a direct consequence of their illegal entry and subsequent lawful detention. MTD at 23-24 (citing Muscat by Berman v. Creative Innervisions LLC, 244 Ariz. 194, 199 (2017)); Reply at 14.

(9th Cir. 2004), the United States requests this court identify only the following questions in its certification order:

- (1) Whether the FTCA’s due care exception bars Plaintiffs’ claims; and
- (2) Whether the FTCA’s discretionary function exception bars Plaintiffs’ claims.

ARGUMENT

Under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), interlocutory review of an otherwise non-appealable order is available when the district court certifies that the order “involves a controlling question of law as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion and that an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation.” If the district court agrees to certify the order, the court of appeals may, in its discretion, allow an interlocutory appeal of an otherwise unappealable order. This is a paradigmatic case suitable for interlocutory review. The United States asserted threshold jurisdictional defenses that raise pure questions of law. If one of the defenses were accepted, it would bring a complete resolution to this litigation and advance the ultimate termination of other actions arising out of similar separations.

I. The Order Involves Controlling Questions of Law

When the FTCA’s due care or discretionary function exceptions apply, the United States has not waived sovereign immunity and the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the claims. See GATX/Airlog Co. v. United States, 286 F.3d 1168, 1173 (9th Cir. 2002) (citations omitted). Whether Plaintiffs’ claims are barred by these exceptions are controlling questions of law that are dispositive in this suit. See Omni MedSci, Inc. v. Apple Inc., 2020 WL 759514, *1 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 14, 2020) (“Standing and subject-matter jurisdiction are controlling issues of law.”); In re Nat’l Found. for Housing, 2011 WL 320979, *4 (C.D. Cal Jan. 27, 2011) (“[S]ubject matter jurisdiction is a controlling issue of law.”).

II. There is Substantial Ground for Difference of Opinion

“A substantial ground for difference of opinion exists where reasonable jurists might disagree on an issue’s resolution.” Reese v. BP Exploration (Alaska) Inc., 643 F.3d 681, 688 (9th Cir. 2011) (emphasis added). “Stated another way, when novel legal issues are presented, on which fair-minded jurists might reach contradictory conclusions, a novel issue may be certified for interlocutory appeal without first awaiting development of contradictory precedent.” Id.; Couch v. Telescope, Inc., 611 F.3d 629, 633 (9th Cir. 2010) (“Courts traditionally will find that a substantial ground for difference of opinion exists where the circuits are in dispute on the question and the court of appeals of the circuit has not spoken on the point, if complicated questions arise under foreign law, or if novel and difficult questions of first impression are presented.”) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). The Supreme Court has explained that “district courts should not hesitate to certify an interlocutory appeal” when a decision “involves a new legal question or is of special consequence.” Mohawk Indus., Inc. v. Carpenter, 558 U.S. 100, 111 (2009).

As discussed below, contradictory precedent already exists with respect to application of the due care and discretionary function exceptions. The Ninth Circuit has not addressed what is required to trigger the due care exception. Moreover, the courts of appeals disagree regarding whether and when the discretionary function exception can

1 apply to discretionary conduct that violates the Constitution. Relatedly, this action
2 involves the consequential legal question of whether a constitutional right to family 3 integrity in the context of immigration detention was “clearly established” and whether 4 there was a specific constitutional prohibition of family separations in such context.
5 Thus, substantial ground for difference of opinion exists as to the controlling questions of 6 law.

8 A. The Due Care Exception

9 The Ninth Circuit has not addressed the level of statutory specificity required to 10 trigger the due care exception, and it is by no means clear that it would adopt the Fourth 11 Circuit’s standard set forth in Welch v. United States, 409 F.3d 646 (4th Cir. 2005).<sup>4</sup> The 12 Ninth Circuit in Borquez v. United States, 773 F.2d 1050 (9th Cir. 1987), did not 13 articulate a standard, but found that the due care exception barred a suit where a statute
14 authorized – but did not require – the government to transfer responsibility for a dam to a 15 private corporation. Borquez, 773 F.2d. at 1053. Decisions from other circuits are also 16 arguably inconsistent with a standard that would require the government to identify a 17 specific, mandatory duty before the due care exception can apply. See Hydrogen Tech.
18 Corp. v. United States, 831 F.2d 1155, 1163 (1st Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1022
19 (1988) (citing 28 U.S.C. § 533, which authorizes the Attorney General to appoint 20 officials “to detect and prosecute crimes against the United States”); Porter v. United
22
23
24

26 <sup>4</sup> Under that standard, a court will first “determine whether the statute or 27 regulation in question specifically proscribes a course of action for an officer to follow.” 28 Id. at 652. Second, “if a specific action is mandated,” the court will “inquire as to whether the officer exercised due care in following the dictates of that statute or regulation.” Id.

1 States, 473 F.2d 1329, 1332 (5th Cir. 1973) (holding that due care exception applied
2 absent any proof or allegation that damage to documents was due to negligence rather 3 than the result of agents of FBI carrying out their appointed functions). And notably the 4 text of the due care exception itself suggests that the Welch standard is too demanding:
5 section 2680(a) refers to conduct “in the execution of a statute or regulation,” not conduct
6 “required by a statute or regulation.”

8         This court distinguished Borquez because the statute at issue therein “explicitly 9 and specifically authorized” the agency to transfer responsibility for the dam, but here 10 there is no statute “explicitly authorizing the government to detain parents and children in 11 separate facilities before it has charged either with a crime.” Order at 5. However, 12 reasonable minds could differ as to whether that is the relevant inquiry here. The Ninth 13 Circuit could conclude that the relevant inquiry is whether federal statute authorized the 14 referral of Plaintiffs for criminal prosecution and authorized the transfer of their children
15 to HHS custody. Under this inquiry, the government acted pursuant to its statutory 16 authority in 8 U.S.C. § 1325(a) to refer Plaintiffs for prosecution and pursuant to the 17 statutory requirement in 8 U.S.C. § 1232(b)(3) to transfer their children to HHS once the 18 minors were determined to be UACs. One could find that under that inquiry, this case
19 fits within the Ninth Circuit’s holding in Borquez.

22         Additionally, the Ninth Circuit has construed 8 U.S.C. § 1231(g) as expressly 23 authorizing the Attorney General to decide in which facilities to detain aliens. 8 U.S.C.
24 § 1231(g)(1) (“[t]he Attorney General shall arrange for appropriate places of detention 25 for aliens detained pending removal or a decision on removal.”); Cmtte. of Cent. Am.
26
27
28

1 Refugees v. I.N.S., 795 F.2d 1434, 1440 (9th Cir. 1986) (“Congress has placed the
2 responsibility of determining where aliens are detained within the discretion of the 3 Attorney General.”). Thus, section 1231(g) confers authority on the Attorney General to 4 detain adults in secure adult facilities, which necessarily results in the separation of 5 family units given the prohibition on detaining children in such facilities. MTD at 5-6; 6 Reply at 7-8. Like the Secretary of the Interior in Borquez, who was “explicitly and 7 specifically authorized” to decide whether to transfer responsibility to a particular water
8 users’ association, the Attorney General is “explicitly and specifically authorized” to 9 decide in which detention facilities to place aliens. The Ninth Circuit might reasonably 10 conclude that the due care exception bars challenges to the government’s decisions 11 regarding placement of aliens pending removal or decision on removal, including the 12 decision to detain parents and their children in separate facilities.
13

16 Finally, even if the Ninth Circuit were to adopt the test set forth in Welch, it may 17 reasonably conclude the challenged action here meets that test. Pursuant to the Welch
18 test, the court found the due care exception inapplicable because “the United States cites 19 no statute or regulation mandating the separation of Plaintiffs upon their entry into the 20 country,” Order at 5, and “no statute or regulation requiring the detention of individuals 21 who are ‘amenable to prosecution’ in facilities different from those who are not 22 ‘amenable to prosecution.’” Id. at 6. But at least one Circuit has recognized the due care 23 exception turns on whether the challenged government action was taken pursuant to a 24 statute or regulation, not whether the particular harm was mandated. See Dupree v.
25 United States, 247 F.2d 819, 824 (3d Cir. 1957) (“Where government employees act 26
27
28

1 pursuant to and in furtherance of regulations, resulting harm is not compensable under 2 the act[.]” (emphasis added) (citations omitted). Moreover, execution of the TVPRA did
3 require DHS to transfer Plaintiffs’ children to HHS custody once they were determined
4 to be UACs, 6 U.S.C. § 279(g). 8 U.S.C. § 1232(b)(3). The court questioned “how a 5 parent who is merely ‘amenable’ to prosecution – but has not been charged with a crime
6 – is, for that reason, unavailable to care for her child.” Order at 6, n.4. However, at the 7 time of the separations, the government reasonably determined that parents who are 8 detained in a secure facility pursuant to federal immigration law or in anticipation of 9 prosecution are not “available to provide care and physical custody” over their children.
10 The Ninth Circuit may well agree with this determination or, at the very least, that an 11 agency’s interpretation of a federal statute cannot be challenged in the context of a 12 section 2680(a) defense. See Baie v. Sec’y of Defense, 784 F.2d 1375, 1376-77 (9th Cir.), 13 cert. denied, 479 U.S. 823 (1986) (the agency’s “interpretation of the statute is a plainly
14 discretionary administrative act the ‘nature and quality’ of which Congress intended to 15 shield from liability under the FTCA.”).

19 B. The Discretionary Function Exception

20 21 Decisions regarding whether and where to detain aliens during the pendency of 22 their removal proceedings undoubtedly involves the broad exercise of discretion. Supra, 23 citing 8 U.S.C. § 1231(g)(1); Cmtte. of Cent. Am. Refugees, 795 F.2d at 1440. Likewise,
24 decisions regarding where to house alien minors is committed to HHS’s discretion. 8
25 U.S.C. § 1232(c)(2)(A) (ORR must place unaccompanied alien children “in the least 26 restrictive setting that is in the best interest of the child.”). Thus, insofar as the court held 27
28

1 that the separation of Plaintiffs from their children resulted not from the execution of 2 federal statutes but from the exercise of discretion regarding the placement of aliens
3 pending their removal proceedings, the Ninth Circuit could reasonably conclude that such 4 discretion is shielded by the discretionary function exception.

6 The court held that Plaintiffs plausibly alleged that the separations violated their 7 constitutional rights and thus were not shielded by the discretionary function exception.
8 Order at 7 (citing Nurse v. United States, 226 F.3d 996 (9th Cir. 2000)). However, Ninth
9 Circuit precedent does not foreclose application of the discretionary function exception
10 here, and reasonable minds could differ on the question of whether and when a 11 constitutional violation precludes application of the discretionary function exception.

13 The Ninth Circuit has held that “the Constitution can limit the discretion of federal 14 officials such that the FTCA’s discretionary function exception will not apply.” Nurse, 15 226 F.3d at 1002 n.2 (emphasis added).<sup>5</sup> But the Ninth Circuit has expressly left open the 16 question whether a constitutional command must, like the dictate of a statute or 17 regulation, be clearly established and specifically prescribe (or proscribe) a course of 18 action:
20

21 In reaching this conclusion, we do not make any decision regarding the level 22 of specificity with which a constitutional proscription must be articulated in 23 order to remove the discretion of a federal actor. We hold only that the 24 Constitution can limit the discretion of federal officials such that the FTCA’s 25 discretionary function exception will not apply.

26 <sup>5</sup> At least one Circuit has held that discretionary conduct alleged to be 27 unconstitutional nevertheless may fall within the discretionary function exception. See 28 Linder v. United States, 937 F.3d 1087, 1091 (7th Cir. 2019), petition for certiorari pending, S. Ct. No. 19-1082.

1 Id.; see also Fazaga v. Fed. Bureau of Investigation, 916 F.3d 1202, 1251 (9th Cir. 2019)
2 (“[I]f the district court instead determines that Defendants did violate a nondiscretionary
3 federal constitutional . . . directive, the FTCA claims may be able to proceed to that 4 degree.”) (emphasis added).<sup>6</sup>

6 It is significant that Plaintiffs alleged a substantive due process violation, which 7 turns on whether the particular conduct at issue “shocks the conscience,” a standard
8 “which is not subject to a rigid list of established elements.” Ms. L., 310 F. Supp. 3d at 9 1142-43 (citing County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 850 (1998)). “On the 10 contrary, an investigation into substantive due process involves an appraisal of the 11 totality of the circumstances rather than a formalistic examination of fixed elements[.]” 12 Id. (quoting Armstrong v. Squadrito, 152 F.3d 564, 570 (7th Cir. 1998)). Thus,
13 reasonable minds could differ as to the level of specificity required of a constitutional 14 provision to preclude application of the discretionary function exception, and whether the 15 right to substantive due process contained in the Fifth Amendment provides the requisite 16 level of specificity.<sup>7</sup>

19 Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit could reasonably hold that only a “clearly 20 established” constitutional directive that removes all choice as to a course of conduct 21 could render the discretionary function exception inapplicable. The Supreme Court has 22
23

---

24
25 <sup>6</sup> See also Garza v. United States, 161 F. App’x 341, 343 (5th Cir. 2005) (holding 26 that the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment did not define a course of action “specific enough to render the discretionary function exception inapplicable”).

27
28 <sup>7</sup> Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit has yet to address whether the discretionary function exception applies to alleged violations of the Fifth Amendment’s substantive due process rights, as neither Nurse nor Fazaga involved allegations of such violations.

1 long recognized that conduct may be discretionary even if it is later determined to have 2 violated the Constitution. The common law doctrine of official immunity thus applies to 3 the exercise of “discretionary functions” even when conduct violates the Constitution, as 4 long as the constitutional right was not defined sufficiently so that the official should 5 have known the act was prohibited. See Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818 (1982)
6 (“[G]overnment officials performing discretionary functions generally are shielded from 7 liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established
8 statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known.”);
9 Castro v. United States, 560 F.3d 381, 394 (5th Cir. 2009) (Smith, J., dissenting) (it 10 would “turn[] Bivens on its head” to conclude that “the United States may be liable for 11 conduct even where its officers cannot be”), 608 F.3d 266 (5th Cir. 2010) (en banc)
12 (panel opinion vacated and district court decision affirmed), cert denied, 562 U.S. 1168
13 (2011). Whether the United States can apply a “qualified immunity”-like approach to the 14 discretionary function exception has yet to be squarely addressed and decided by the 15 courts of appeals. See, e.g., Loumiet v. United States, 828 F.3d 935, 946 (D.C. Cir. 2016)
16 (“[L]eav[ing] for another day the question whether the FTCA immunizes exercises of 17 policy discretion in violation of constitutional constraints that are not already clear.”).

18
20
21
22 Under that standard, the Ninth Circuit could reasonably find that, at the time of the 23 relevant conduct, it was not “clearly established” that parents had a constitutional right to 24 remain with their children in immigration detention. Indeed, prior to the separations at 25 issue here, the Fourth Circuit held that no such constitutional right exists. See Reyna as 26 next friend of J.F.G. v Hott, 921 F.3d 204, 210-11 (4th Cir. 2019) (rejecting challenge by

1 two aliens who were arrested and detained under 8 U.S.C. § 1226(a) pending removal,
2 holding that decisions regarding the right to family integrity “hardly support the asserted
3 right to be detained in the same state as one’s children, the right to be visited by children
4 while in detention, or a general right to ‘family unity’ in the context of detention.”). And 5 one district court observed that such right was not “clearly established.” See United 6 States v. Dominguez-Portillo, 2018 WL 315759, *6 (W.D. Tex. Jan. 5, 2018) (addressing 7 parental rights of detained adult alien and noting “lack of clearly established parental 8 rights in these circumstances and under case law.”).

11 III. Immediate Appeal Will Materially Advance the Ultimate Termination of 12 Litigation

13 “[N]either § 1292(b)’s literal text nor controlling precedent requires that 14 interlocutory appeal have a final, dispositive effect on the litigation, only that it ‘may 15 materially advance’ the litigation.” Reese v. BP Exploration (Alaska) Inc., 643 F.3d 681, 16 688 (9th Cir. 2011) (emphasis added). These controlling questions of law also are at 17 issue in A.P.F. v. United States, No. 2:20-cv-00065, and may govern resolution of 18 pending administrative claims arising out of the family separations if suits are brought on 19 those claims.<sup>8</sup> Thus, a ruling in the United States’ favor on interlocutory appeal would 20 significantly advance the termination of those other claims as well. See In re Cement

24 <sup>8</sup> The A.P.F. plaintiffs’ motion to transfer their lawsuit pursuant to Local Rule 42.1
25 was granted on April 14, 2020. ECF No. 35. In the transfer order, this court stated that 26 “arguments made by the United States for lack of subject matter jurisdiction are 27 substantially identical to the arguments made in [C.M.],” and “both cases involve 28 substantially the same questions of law and would entail substantial duplication of labor if heard by different judges. Both cases also involve the enforcement of the same policy of family separation by federal employees in Arizona in May 2018.” Id. at 2.
Furthermore, there are over four hundred (400) pending administrative claims arising out of the family separations, and many more still may be presented.

1 Antitrust, 673 F.2d 1020, 1026 (9th Cir.1982) (en banc) (section 1292(b) certification to 2 be used when “allowing an interlocutory appeal would avoid protracted and expensive
3 litigation.”); 16 Charles Alan Wright et al., Fed. Prac. and Proc. § 3931 (3d ed. 2008) (the 4 court should weigh, among other things, “[t]he difficulty and general importance of the 5 question presented” and “the significance of the gains from reversal.”).

7 CONCLUSION

8 For the foregoing reasons, this court should certify its Order dated March 30, 2020
9 (ECF No. 31), for interlocutory appeal.
